

Ablutions

Now that I have reached my eighties, I find that when I am performing my usual morning ablutions, I tend to admonish myself, only somewhat wryly, that it is quite likely not practical for me to purchase any econo-sized tubes of toothpaste, or, in fact, anything so sized.

This thought generally brings a smile to my face and makes the wrinkles somehow more acceptable.